You can fly now and pay...never with Pacific's new group travel plan

Here's the idea.

Nearly everyone knows of friends (nodding acquaintances will do) who are planning a trip. Perhaps it's a group of business associates going to a meeting. A few friends planning a week-end trip. Or fellow club members setting up a vacation jaunt.

If they're going someplace in California, Oregon or Nevada we probably go there too... and regularly.

Chances are too that they'd like to have someone help them with their travel arrangements.

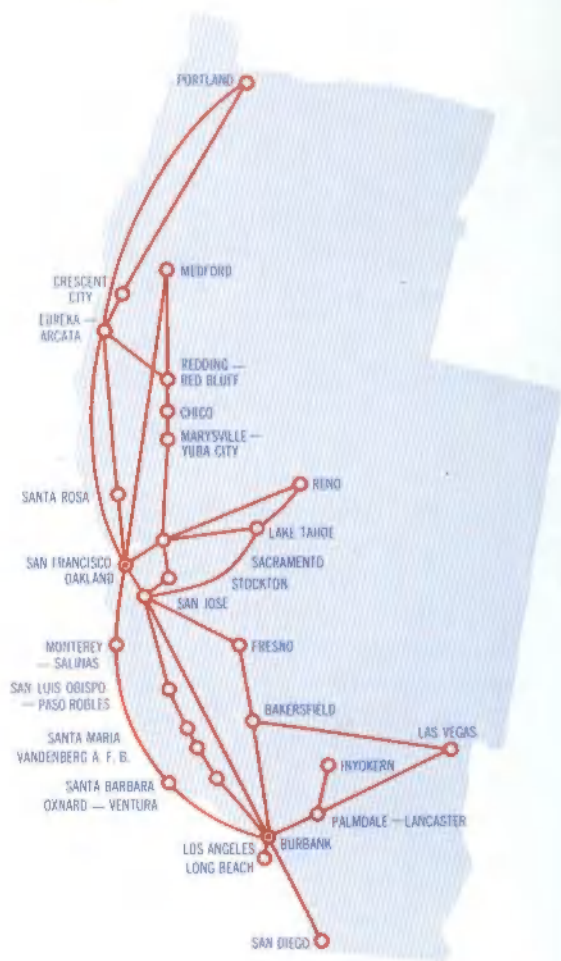

And that's where you can come in.

By organizing the group and arranging that you and your group fly round-trip together to the same Pacific destination you get to fly free! (Members of the group may return home independently, if they desire.)

Best of all, the larger the group the more free seats Pacific allows. One free passage will be issued to a group tour developer for each 7 full-fare paying passengers in the group.

What will you do with the extra seats? As group tour developer you can use them to promote greater response to the particular group trip you're organizing.

But don't delay, get complete details from Pacific Air Lines or your local Travel Agent. At these prices how can you afford to stay home?
